I have a Linux machine, where I want to know how many Linux processes are currently running at the same time. I can see the output of TOP, but it's only for the top two processes. How can I know the number of simultaneous processes? A: The number of simultaneous processes (affecting a single user at the same time) is reported by the /proc/sys/kernel/pid_max file. A: The value of /proc/sys/kernel/pid_max is the number of simultaneous processes (affecting a single user at the same time). Please note that the kernel/pid_max variable is updated after a reboot. To estimate the number of processes running as a user, you could use the procs utility: ps -e --pid $(pgrep -u USERNAME) Explanation of command: ps -e this will show you the current users processes --pid $(pgrep -u USERNAME) this will grab the PID of the given user pgrep -u USERNAME is a feature that's usually available on newer versions of Linux (for example yum provides it by default if you installed CentOS 6.x). This command will show you only the PID's of the running processes of the given user. A: The trick is to run top without the -b flag. Because top -b reports an inaccurate number of processes. ps -e --pid $(pgrep -u username) | wc
